

Medicine in Practice Launches On-Demand Training for Clinical Research Transparency

Medicine In Practice, Inc. announces the launch of Compliance Time™ to help clinical research teams in both biopharma and academia become or stay compliant with ever-increasing transparency initiatives.

The Compliance Time website presents Medicine in Practice's unique WEBFlex training™, which combines the affordability and accessibility of webinars with adult learning best practices and the sophistication of eLearning. On successful completion of each Course learners may print a graded Certificate.

Early content focuses on Good Registry Practice (GRP) – compliance with protocol registration and results reporting in both the US and EU. Courses planned for later this summer include Good Publication Practice (GPP) and the emerging area of Sharing Research Data (SRD).

Content may be accessed using desktop, tablet or smartphone to facilitate “Any time ... Anywhere” learning. Each Course breaks down often complex and multi-faceted compliance tasks into simple, easily-remembered steps. Courses are presented in short, engaging video lectures - an approach that is very popular with adult learners as it fits well with their busy schedule.

All Courses are built using one of more subject matter experts who create the curriculum, outline learning objectives and detail critical content. These materials are then transformed into compelling video lectures using adult learning best practices.

Courses are available via personal or organizational subscription, and not only help to quickly build confidence and competence in learners, but also act as an invaluable reference resource. Each Course also includes a FLEXLinks document containing links to important reference or other materials to help quickly grow each learner's expertise.
